

Editor's Comment:

The revised manuscript is much improved from the first one. I think it needs one last copyediting effort to get the "English" correct, for example you enlighten not enlight..... (see first sentence).... So, provided that you can have an English editor do some final copy editing, I would accept the revised paper for publication after that one last English copy editing. The work is clear, makes sound points and uses scholarly literature to support those points. I think it falls into the category of a review article.
